Security tip from Information Technology Services

Social media - not just for socializing.

Tailgating: fun at football, bad at work

Tailgating can be fun at a game, but at work it can be risky. Tailgating in health care is a common, usually innocent security breach when a team member badges into an area and then holds the door open for other teammates, visitors without badges or a uniformed worker. Click here to learn more. Email Safety@PrismaHealth.org with any questions.
